

Truth. Love. Together.

“We live in a post-everything age.”

This refrain is often heard when discussing the present-day challenges and opportunities of being a Christian today in the West. Our culture is post-everything: truth, knowledge, morality, sexuality, gender, religion, and God. As it moves past the before-mentioned the cultural chaos of divisions, suspicions, and marginalization increases. What does this mean for followers of Jesus?

This series IS NOT meant to be a lament for the good ole days. The task of a Christian is not to whine about the moment in which we live but to understand its problems and respond appropriately to them.

This series IS an offering to plant our feet in God’s truth and love. We start with truth because that seems to be the “old maid” in the discussions of our day. We place truth next to love, because love unmoored from truth drifts into whatever one chooses it to be.

Our goal is to become a people useful in God’s mission by seeing His hand above and in the chaos, and to be His people living both truth and love in such a way that we may be blameless and innocent, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and twisted generation, among whom you shine as lights in the world. (Philippians 2:14–15) We want to be people of hope IN the living God and FOR all others.

This is the call of the Christian life. This is Truth. Love. Together.
